

What are some of the ways you have improved your writing process since taking a college writing class?

What do you continue to struggle with?

Meghan, Nursing:

I think some of the biggest improvements I've had since taking a college writing course are in my own confidence.

Miranda, Accounting:

Some of the ways that I have improved my writing process would have to be that I learned how to revise first and then edit because you don't want to edit something that you're going to take out later.

I also learned that good editing takes lots of time. You have to edit your paper more than once or twice because, if you don't, there is a good likelihood that you'll miss something.

Cristaliz, Pre-Pharmacy:

I have improved in many different ways. First of all, by learning the structure of the essay because there are different kinds of essays. Also, I learned how to order them [essays] together, to put it together. Sometimes, I have problems or trouble with the thesis or getting my ideas on paper. So what I would do is get all of my ideas first on paper and then try to order them.

Matt, Physical Therapy:

One thing that I continue to struggle with are in-text citations. I miss some from time to time. They weren't really stressed in my high school, so I do slip up sometimes.

Meghan, Nursing:

For me I think the hardest part is that sometimes I go too big in a topic, so sometimes figuring that out. I have all of these lists when I begin writing of what I might want to cover on a certain topic, and so narrowing that down and keeping that focus so it's a very clear and concise message sometimes is difficult for me.
